Customer Reviews

Another great Ben Hood read. Spoiler alert. This one starts with Ben, Rod and Rose at a wedding. Ben wishes he were anywhere but at this wedding. Hell. He doesn't know the groom or the bride nor does he want to know them. Ben excuses himself from Rod and the "Wedding of the Year" and heads for the restrooms. While there he overhears two men talking and from what they are saying he thinks they are there to disrupt the wedding or worse. Of course Ben takes the one out only to find that they are hired security for the wedding and of course Rod jumps all over him. Tony Haddad and Crystal Taylor are the "happy" couple about to get married. They are marrying for their own reasons and love isn't one of them. Haddad launders money and sends it to the ME for use by terrorists. He's already had several people killed and Crystal's brother was one of them. Crystal wants to bring him down and her daughter, Hunter, is one hundred percent behind what her Mother is trying to do. Only problem is her Mother is lying to her. Aitutaki also known as Araura and various other South Pacific names, is one of the quite small Cook Islands north of one of the main Cook Islands. Once the Europeans came the missionaries were right behind them. Now all the natives are either catholic or some other religion. Some of the buildings the natives built for their Gods are still on the Island. After the wedding Haddad pulls Ben aside to speak with him. He thinks Ben is extremely wealthy, runs an adult lingerie and sex toy business and owns a thirty million dollar yacht. A yacht that he, Haddad, wants to buy. Ben hasn't got the foggiest clue what the man is talking about. So begins another find Ben Hood read.
