This collection intrigued me. People tire of werewolves, zombies, vampires, etc, etc. Pete Kahle set out to find some unique creature creations with his Bloodshot Books debut anthology. A lot of these stories are pretty good and apparently Pete had so many submissions that he needs to do a second book. I very much want to read that book as well. I found so many writers that I want to read more from. Now, not every story was a winner. There were a few I did not like, but it usually had something to do with the writer's writing style or it was something outside of my usual genre for reading, I always checked the author's bio after their story and usually found that they wrote award winning stories. So, it's not as if Pete was putting bad stories in the collection. It just wasn't my taste and that's pretty common when I read anthologies. Just goes to show you that he put something in there for everyone. I'd like to point out a few of my favorite stories. Pete's got some of the best right at the beginning. It Must Feed- A woman is forced to move in with her sister and realizes something isn't quite right with her. The twist is so crazy. Not sure how they came up with it. The New Governess- Classic story of two kids that keep managing to rid themselves of their nannies. One, however, is quite different. Great ending that brings everything full circle. Tunnel Vision- Great story. Imagine driving inside a tunnel and there's a car crash. Now, also imagine there's something that's escaped from containment in that same tunnel. Great characters and set up. The Goldbug- A man finds an interesting gold statue of a bug at a shop.....and you can probably guess where this is going. At the end, Pete put two great stories.
