Customer Reviews

This review for "Hello Love" by author Karen McQuestion was a hard one to write. A lot of good in this book, but also so much that I find troubling. More than a year after his wife Christine's death, Dan is still trying to cope with his loss. He and his daughter, Lindsay, have each other and their little dog, Anni, for support and comfort. One day, Anni is stolen from in front of their house by a bunch of rough punks--"frat boys". As the weeks go by, Lindsay continues a hopeful search, but Dan begins to despair of ever seeing their beloved Anni again. Meanwhile, Andrea, an office manager for a property owner, has to contact a tenant about a complaint, and she discovers a mistreated dog chained on a balcony outside in the cold. Going with her heart's instinct, she rescues the poor dog and takes her home. Andrea has been suffering the lingering effects of a painful divorce, and the sweet-natured dog, whose collar says "Anni", becomes a welcome companion. Dan and Andrea casually begin to cross paths without realizing that they have a mutual furry friend--Anni. Fate seems determined to somehow bring Dan, Andrea, Lindsay, and Anni together. Dan and Lindsay even have visitations from Christine's spirit, who tries to guide them in the right direction. I found the main characters appealing, and the story was well-paced. However, the plot was propelled by the mishaps and mistreatment, either by carelessness or direct abuse, that befell dear little Anni. In particular, one event near the end of the book, in which the heroine makes a very poor choice considering all that has already occurred, left me shaking my head.
